On 28th of March, in Italy, during a workshop organized by the Unité des Communes Valdôtaines Evançon and the University of Valle d'Aosta, around 30 stakeholders of the AlpSatellites project gathered to discuss the community's strategic view on telecommuting. Attracting new residents, in particular young couples and families with children, by offering them remote working opportunities was the agreed-upon priority, combined with an increase in workation offers to boost tourism, better knowledge of the area and a longer stay. Participants discussed also challenges, such as improving public transports, housing market and work-life balance services. The Unité Evançon will soon publish a report on the results of stakeholder consultation.
